BETTER CONTENT PROCESSES FOR AN SEO AGENCY

Direction is a small marketing agency delivering SEO services to middle-stage to established company clients. Its staff of 10+ experts includes marketing managers and SEO analysts who provide guidance on the best strategies for linking, keyword ranking, and gaining a competitive edge, among other SEO hacks. Direction is all about SEO and content deliverables, but they were having trouble getting their content production processes down. They had quality issues with the writing they were receiving from other vendors, some so severe that they extended into plagiarism. The company was also struggling with the process to request and review content, which had become a time-and resource-consuming burden. Direction knew they needed a change, and fast. Their brand reputation depended on their ability to get better content with a better strategy. ContentBacon stepped in to help create a stronger content production process and get the quality Direction needed for their SEO clients. The results ended up being a game-changer for Direction. Here's a deeper look at what happened.

DIRECTION'S STORY

For any successful SEO strategy, content must be center stage and spot on in terms of answering the questions that people are searching for on search engines. This means that organizations need to drip content into their websites that will consistently provide valuable information and resources to their target audiences. Old content and links also need to stay updated so that the content continues to be relevant and meaningful.

Direction helps their clients accomplish these goals and more to give them better, more comprehensive SEO strategies and set them apart from their competitors. These clients may understand SEO basics, but they just don't have the time, energy, or expertise to give it the focus it needs. As part of their strategy, Direction aims to deliver SEO-friendly content that performs, driving results and growth.

DIRECTION'S CHALLENGES: CONTENT QUALITY AND PROCESS

Direction had been running into issues finding high-quality content and understanding the full extent of the production process. They wanted to save money where possible, but quickly learned the most cost-effective avenues weren't always the best options. The cheaper content vendors ended up providing assignments filled with mistakes, redundancies, and even plagiarism.

The solution was simple: Customers are much more satisfied and see actual results with better content. Direction needed higher-quality written deliverables as well as a complete and dedicated team behind their content strategy to deliver better results for their clients.

Enter ContentBacon.

Why did they choose

CONTENTBACON?

Before ContentBacon, Direction worked with content mills to get their deliverables for clients. The process was convoluted:

Direction's team had to submit requests for writing assignments through a web form, and each had to include an article title, writer notes, an outline of subtopics to include, research links, a deadline, and other information.

Each request was then sent to an assignments queue where any one of more than 4,000 writers could take on the draft.

If a deadline was missed, Direction was responsible for following up about the assignment with the account manager.

It was a lot of work for Direction to write extremely comprehensive outlines for more than 100 (and growing) assignments each month. Even still, some content wasn't high quality and often lacked proper sourcing, editing, or proofreading. Asking for revisions from writers was next to impossible.

Direction reached out to ContentBacon for a more customized solution that didn't involve non-expert writers from a massive pool working on their content. They learned how ContentBacon's their team of experts could streamline the content process and take on all the steps involved in creation and production. A plagiarized article from the content mill was the final straw for Direction to make the switch.
